INTERCULTURAL DIALOGUE

What is intercultural dialogue?

- It is an approach through words and conversation between people or organisations of different cultures of origin, based on mutual respect.
- Dialogue is possible when people and organisations of different cultures of origin come into contact, in condition of equality with the opportunity of expressing themselves at the same level.

How does intercultural dialogue work?

- By sharing common ideas as well as differences, with the intention of understanding different points of view and the diversity in different ways of seeing life.
- By addressing the conversation with an open mind, curiosity and disposition to learn and exchange ideas between people of different cultural origins.

What does intercultural dialogue work for?

- To accept the equal dignity of all human cultures and to be able to find solutions to cultural conflicts through communication and respect.
- To understand that giving space to different points of view does not mean a denial of our own identity.
- To enhance the exchange of ideas, diversity of opinions, conflict resolution, tolerance and confidence in others.
- To truly live in the company of others, evolve together and promote improvements at the individual, familiar, social and economic level, in an environment where discrepancies don't break relationships.
